क

क 1. ka, the first consonant of the alphabet, and the first of the guttural letters, corresponding in sound to k in keep or king. — Ka-kāra, as, m. the letter or sound ka. — Kakāra-varga, as, m. the guttural consonants collectively.

क 2. ka, kas, kā, kim, interrog. pron. (see kim and 2. kad, and cf. the following words in which the interrogative base ka appears, katama, katara, kati, katham, kadā, karhī, kā, &c.), who? which? what? In its declension ka follows the pronoun tad (Gram. 223) except in nom. acc. sing. neut., where kim has taken the place of kad or kat in classical Sanskrit; but the old form kad is found in the Veda.

The interrogative sentence introduced by ka is often terminated by iti (e. g. kasya sa putra iti kathayātām, let it be said, 'whose son is he?'), but iti may be omitted and the sentence lose its direct interrogative character (e. g. kasya sa putro na jñāyate, it is not known whose son he is). Ka with or without as, 'to be', may express 'how is it possible that?' 'what power have I, you, they, &c.?' (e. g. ke mama dhanvino'nye, what can the other archers do against me? ke āvām paritrātum, what power have we to rescue you?). Ka is often connected with a demonstrative pron. (e. g. ko 'yam āyāti, who comes here?) or with the potential (e. g. ko Hariṃ nindet, who will blame Hari?). Ka is sometimes repeated (e. g. kaḥ ko 'tra, who is there? kān kān, whom? whom? i. e. which of them? cf. Gram. 53. a), and the repetition is often due to a kind of attraction (e. g. keśhām kim sāstram adhyayanīyam, which book is to be read by whom? Gram. 836. a). When kim is connected with the inst. c. of a noun or with the indecl. participle it may express 'what is gained by doing so, &c.?' (e. g. nirujāḥ kim auśhadhāt, what is the use of medicine to the healthy? kim vilambena, what is gained by delay? kim bahunā, what is the use of more words? kim pauruṣaḥ hatvā suptam, what manliness is there in killing one asleep?).

Ka is often followed by the particles iva, u, nāma, nu, vā, vid, some of which serve merely to generalize the interrogation (e.g. kim tva etad, what can this be? ka u śravat, who can possibly hear? ko nāma jānāti, who indeed knows? ko vā ayam, who is this? kim nu kāryam, what is to be done? ko vā devād anyah, who possibly other than a god? kasya vid hṛdayam nāsti, of what person is there no heart?).

Ka is occasionally used alone as an indefinite pronoun, especially in negative sentences (e.g. na kasya ko vallabhaḥ, no one is a favourite of any one; nānyo jānāti kaḥ, no one else knows; katham sa ghātayati kaḥ, how does he kill any one? More usually, however, ka is only made indefinite when connected with the particles ca, āna, cid, vā, and api, in which case ka may sometimes be preceded by the relative ya (e.g. ye ke ca, any persons whatsoever; yaśyat kasyaś ca devatāyat, to any deity whatsoever; yāni kani ca mitrāni, any friends whatsoever; yat kiñca, whatever). The particle āna, being composed of ca and na, properly gives a negative force to the pronoun (e.g. yasmād Indrād rīte kiñcāna, without which Indra there is nothing), but the negative sense is generally dropped (e.g. kaścāna, any one; na kaścāna, no one), and a relative is sometimes connected with it (e.g. yat kiñcāna, anything whatsoever). Examples of cid with the interrogative are common; vā and api are not so common, but the latter is often found in classical Sanskrit (e.g. kaścid, any one; kecid, some; na kaścid, no one; na kiñcid api, nothing whatsoever; yaḥ kaścid, any one whatsoever; kecit—kecit, some—others; yāmin kaśmin vā deśe, in any country whatsoever; na ko 'pi, no one; na kimapi, nothing whatever).

Ka may sometimes be used, like २. kad, at the beginning of a compound. See ka-pūya, &c.

क ३. ka, as, m, the Who? the Inexplicable, the Unknown. By a forced and erroneous interpretation of the interrogative pronoun occurring in a hymn of the Rīg-veda (X. 121. kaśmat devāya havishā vidhema, what god shall we worship with oblations?) the word ka is applied as a name to any chief god or object of worship, as Prajāpati, Brahmā, Viṣṇu; air or wind; the sun; the mind; the soul; Yama; Kāma-deva, the god of love; fire; a peacock; a N. of Dakṣa (a clever or dexterous man?); a knot, joint; the king of the birds; a prince in general; the body; time; wealth, property; sound; light, splendor.

क ४. ka, am, n, (also regarded as ind.), happiness, joy, pleasure; water; the head, hair; a head of hair. (Perhaps this word has arisen from a far-fetched etymology of the word nāka, 'pleasure', i. e. na-a-ka, 'not-not-pleasure'.) — Ka-ja, as, ā, am, produced in or by water, watery, aquatic; (am), n, a lotus. — Kā-da, as, m, 'giving water', a cloud.

कथन् katham (fr. 2. ka), ind. how? in what manner? whence? (e.g. katham etat, how is that? katham idānim, how now? what is now to be done? katham mārātmake trayi vīśvāsāt, how can there be reliance on thee of murderous mind? katham uterīya tvām gaścheyam, how can I go away deserting you? katham buddhvā bhavishyati ā, how will she be when she awakes? katham mṛityuḥ prabhavati vedavāidām, whence is it that death has power over those that know the Veda? katham avagamyate, whence is it inferred?). Sometimes katham merely introduces an interrogation (e.g. katham ātmānam nīvelayāmi katham vā ātmā-pahāram karomi, shall I declare myself or shall I withdraw?).

Katham is often found in connection with the particles iva, nāma, nu, svid, which appear to generalize the interrogation (how possibly? &c.); with nu it sometimes = kimsu or kutas (e.g. katham nu, how much more! na katham nu, how much less!).

Katham is often connected, like kim, with the particles ēna, ēid, and api, which give an indefinite sense to the interrogative (e.g. katham ēna, in no way, not at all). When not itself negative katham ēna = in some way, some how; scarcely, with difficulty; na katham ēna, in no way; kathanēit, some how or other, by some means or other, in any way, with some difficulty, scarcely, in a moderate degree, a little; na kathanēit, not at all, in no way whatever; na kathanēid, in no way not, i. e. most decidedly; yathā kathanēit, in any way whatsoever; kathanēid yadi jīvati, it is with difficulty that he lives; katham api, some how or other, with some difficulty, scarcely, a little; katham api na, by no means, not at all. In addition to the above senses lexicographers assert that katham may imply 'amazement, surprise, pleasure, abuse'; [with katham cf. Gr. καρδ.]

At the beginning of an adjective compound katham may have the same sense as kim. — Katham-rūpa, as, ā, am, of what shape? — Katham-vīrya, as, ā, am, of what power? — Katham-kathika, as, ā, am (fr. katham katham), one who is always asking questions, an inquisitive person. — Kathan-kathika-tā, f. questioning, inquiring, inquisitiveness. — Kathan-kathita (f), as, m. an interrogant, one who puts questions. — Kathan-karman, ā, ā, a, how acting? — Kathan-kāram, ind. in which manner? — Kathan-tā, f. enquiry, question, demand. — Katham-pramāṇa, as, ā, am, of what measure? — Katham-bhāva, as, m. what state? — Katham-bhūta, as, ā, am, how being? of what kind?

2. kathā, ind. (for katham), Ved. how? whence? why? Sometimes merely a particle of interrogation (e.g. kathā śrīṇoti Indrah, does Indra hear? yathā kathā ēa, in any way whatsoever).

कद 2. kad, ind. (originally the neuter form of the interrogative pronoun ka), Ved. a particle of interrogation, where? Kad is used like kim, with the particles ēna and ēid (e.g. na kaccāna upadīḥ śrīṇve rathasya, not at any time or in any manner is heard the noise of thy chariot; etā dvāḥ kaccēd ā, he comes from heaven now and then). Kaccēd is sometimes used, like the simple kad, as a particle of interrogation (e.g. ka cēd dṛishṭā trayā Damayanti, was Damayanti seen by thee?). Kaccēd may sometimes be equivalent to 'I hope that' (e.g. vyādhir na kaccēt te śarīram pratibādhate, I hope no illness afflicts thy body).

किम् kim, ind. (originally nom. and acc. sing. n. of 2. ka, q. v.), how? whence? wherefore? why?

Kim is much used as a particle of interrogation like the Lat. num, an, sometimes translatable by ‘whether?’ but oftener serving only like a note of interrogation to mark a question (e. g. kim vyādha vane smin sañcaranti, do hunters roam about in this wood? In an interrogation the verb if uncompounded with a preposition generally retains its accent after kim). To this sense may be referred the kim expressing blame, deficiency, &c., at the beginning of compounds (e. g. kim-rājan, what sort of a king? i. e. a bad king); also the kim prefixed to verbs with a similar meaning (e. g. kim-adhite, he reads badly). Kim-uta or kim-utvā or kim-uta-uta or kim-athavā-uta, whether—or or; [cf. uta.]

Kim is very frequently connected with other particles, as follows: Kim anga, wherefore then? atha kim, how else? surely; kim api, somewhat, to a considerable extent, rather, much more, still further; kim itī, why? (see itī); kimu or kimuta, how much more? how much less? kim kila, what a pity! (expressing dissatisfaction); kiñcā, moreover, further; kiñ-cāna (originally negative—‘in no way’), to a certain degree, a little; kiñcit, somewhat, a little; kim tarhi, how then? but, however; kimtu, but, however, nevertheless (bearing the same relation to tu that kiñcā bears to ca); kin-nu, whether indeed? (a stronger interrogative than kim alone); how much more? how much less? kin nu khalu, how possibly? (a still stronger interrogative); kim punar, how much more? how much less? kim vā, whether? or whether? or, (often a mere particle of interrogation); kim vāt, whether? how? (a mere particle of interrogation like the last).

(In the earlier legends he appears as a great hero and teacher; in the more recent he is deified, and is often represented as a young and amorous shepherd with flowing hair and a flute in his hand. The following are a few particulars of his birth and history as related in the Purāṇas &c.: Vasu-deva, who was a descendant of Yadu and Yayāti, had two wives, Rohiṇī and Devakī. The latter had eight sons, of whom the eighth was Kṛṣṇa. Kaṣa, king of Mathurā and cousin of Devakī, was informed by a prediction that one of these sons would kill him. He therefore kept Vasu-deva and his wife in confinement, and slew their first six children. The seventh was Bala-rāma, who was saved by being abstracted from the womb of Devakī and transferred to that of Rohiṇī. The eighth was Kṛṣṇa, who was born with black skin and a peculiar mark on his breast. His father Vasu-deva managed to escape from Mathurā with the child, and favoured by the gods found a herdsman named Nanda, whose wife Yaśodā had just been delivered of a son, which Vasu-deva conveyed to Devakī, after substituting his own in its place. Nanda with his wife Yaśodā took the infant Kṛṣṇa and settled first in Gokula or Vraja, and afterwards in Vṛndāvana, where Kṛṣṇa and Bala-rāma grew up together, roaming in the woods and joining in the sports of the herdsmen's sons. Kṛṣṇa as a youth contested the sovereignty of Indra, and was victorious over that god, who descended from heaven to praise Kṛṣṇa, and made him lord over the cattle. Kṛṣṇa is described as sporting constantly with the Gopīs or shepherdesses, of whom a thousand became his wives, though only eight are specified, Rādhā being the favourite. Kṛṣṇa built and fortified a city called Dvārakā in Gujārāt, and thither transported the inhabitants of Mathurā after killing Kaṣa. Kṛṣṇa had various wives besides the Gopīs, and by Rukmiṇī had a son Pradyumna, who is usually identified with Kāma-deva; with Jaiṇas, Kṛṣṇa is one of the nine black Vasu-devas; with Buddhists he is the chief of the black demons, who are the enemies of Buddha and the white demons; N. of a king of the Nāgas; N. of an Asura or demon; N. of Arjuna, the most renowned of the Pāṇḍu princes (so named apparently from his colour as a child, see Mahā-bh. गन्धर्व gandharva or sometimes in post-Vedic writings gandharba, as, m. a Gandharva. Though in later times the Gandharvas are regarded as a class, yet in the Rig-veda rarely more than one is mentioned; he is commonly designated as the 'heavenly Gandharva' (divyo Gandharvah), and sometimes named Viśvā-vasu; his habitation is the sky, or the region of the air and the heavenly waters; his especial duty is to guard the heavenly Soma, which the gods obtain through his intervention. It is obtained for the human race by Indra, who conquers the Gandharva and takes it by force. The heavenly Gandharva is supposed to be a good physician, because the Soma is considered as the best medicine; possibly, however, the word Soma originally denoted not the beverage so called, but the moon, and the heavenly Gandharva may have been the genius or tutelary deity of the moon. It is certain that the heavenly Gandharva and the Soma are sometimes identified. He is also regarded as one of the genii who regulate the course of the Sun's horses; he knows and makes known the secrets of heaven and divine truths generally. He is the parent of the first pair of human beings, Yama and Yami, and has a peculiar mystical power over women and a right to possess them. For this reason he is invoked in marriage ceremonies. Ecstatic states of mind and possession by evil spirits are supposed to be derived from the heavenly Gandharva. With Jains he is an attendant of the seventeenth Arhat of the present Avasarpini. The Gandharvas as a class have the same characteristic features as the one Gandharva; they live in the sky, guard the Soma, are governed by Varuṇa (just as the Apsarasas are governed by Soma), know the best medicines, regulate the course of the asterisms (in one passage of the Vājasaneyi-Saṁhitā twenty-seven being mentioned), follow after women and are desirous of intercourse with them. As soon as a girl becomes marriageable, she belongs to Soma, the Gandharvas, and Agni. The wives of the Gandharvas are the Apsarasas, and like them the Gandharvas are invoked in gambling with dice; they are also feared as evil beings together with the Rakshasas, Kimlins, Piśācas, &c., amulets being worn as a protection against them. In the Satapatha-Brāhmaṇa they are called the preceptors of the Rishis. In epic poetry the Gandharvas are the celestial musicians or heavenly singers who form the orchestra at the banquets of the gods, and they belong together with the Apsarasas to Indra's heaven, sharing also in his battles. In the more systematic mythology the Gandharvas constitute one of the classes into which the higher creation is divided (e.g. gods, manes, Gandharvas; or gods, Asuras, Gandharvas, men, &c.). In one passage of the Taittirīya-Āraṇyaka eleven classes of Gandharvas are mentioned. The chief or leader of the Gandharvas is named Citra-ratha. They are sometimes called the creatures of Prajapati or Brahmā. With Jains the Gandharvas constitute one of the eight classes of the Vyantaras. The following meanings are also given to the word gandharva—a singer; the Koil or black cuckoo; the soul after death, and previous to its being born again (corresponding in some respects to the western notion of a ghost); a horse; the sun; a sage, a pious man; a kind of deer, according to some, the musk deer; (i), f. च

च 2. ca, ind. (a particle and conjunction usually translatable by) and, both, also, moreover, as well as. This conjunction, like the Lat. que and Gr. τε, is usually placed as an enclitic after the word which it connects with what precedes, and when used with the personal pronouns these must appear in their fuller accented forms (e.g. tava ca mama ca, both of thee and of me, not te ca me ca). It connects whole sentences as well as parts of sentences, and seems to have been originally placed after both the words or clauses which it joins together, for in the Rig-veda the double ca occurs much more frequently than the single (e.g. aham ca tvam ca, I and thou). The double ca may also be used somewhat redundantly in classical Sanskrit (e.g. kva haripakānām jīvitam cātīlolaṃ kva ca vajrasārāḥ sarāṣ te, where is both the frail existence of fawns and where are thy adamant arrows?). In the later literature, however, the first ca is more usually omitted (e.g. aham tvam ca), and when more than two things are enumerated only one ca is often found (e.g. tejasā yadāśā lakṣmī sītīyā ca parayā, in glory, in fame, in beauty, and in high condition). Elsewhere, when more than two things are enumerated, ca is placed after some and omitted after others (e.g. ṛiṇa-dātā ca vaidyaśca srotriya nadi, both the payer of a debt and a physician [and] a Brahman [and] a river). In the Veda and even in classical Sanskrit, when the double ca would generally be used, the second may occasionally be omitted (e.g. Indraśca Somaḥ, both Indra [and] Soma; durbhedyāśca āśu-sandheyāḥ, both difficult to be divided [and] quickly to be united). Rarely ca may imply a reference to certain other words which are not expressed (e.g. hamandalaṃ ca karakaḥ, the word karaka has the meaning 'pitcher' and other meanings).

Ca may be used for vā and is then translatable by 'either,' or' (e.g. īha cāmūtra vā, either here or hereafter; strī vā pumān vā yacchānyat satvām, either a woman or a man or any other being); and when a negative particle is joined with ca the two may then be translated by 'neither,' nor.' Occasionally one ca or one na may be omitted (e.g. na ca paribhoctum naiva śaknōmi hātum, I am able neither to enjoy nor to abandon; na pūrvāhne na ca parāhne, neither in the forenoon nor in the afternoon).

Ca is often joined to the adverbs eva, api, tathā, tathāiva, &c., either with or without a negative particle (e.g. vairiṇam nopaseveta sahāyam cāiva vairiṇaḥ, one ought not to serve either an enemy or the ally of an enemy). See eva, api, &c.

Ca sometimes = eva, even, indeed, certainly, just, &c. (e.g. su-cintitum cāushadham na nāma-mātreṇa karoty a-rogam, even a well-devised remedy does not cure a disease by its mere name; yāvanta eva te tāvāśca sa, as great as they [were] just so great was he).

Ca may occasionally be disjunctive and be translated by 'but,' 'on the contrary,' 'on the other hand,' 'yet,' 'nevertheless' (e.g. varam ādyau na cāntimāḥ, better the two first but not the last; sāntam idam āśrama-padam sphurati ca bāhuḥ, this hermitage is tranquil yet my arm throbs).

Ca—ca may be used to express immediate connection between two acts or their simultaneous occurrence (e.g. mama ca muktaṃ tamasā mano manasijena dhanuṣi sarāśca nivesitāḥ, no sooner is my mind freed from darkness than a shaft is fixed on his bow by the heart-born god).

Ca rarely = et, if (e.g. jīvitum cecchase, if thou wishest to live).

Ca may be used as an expletive (e.g. anyaiśca kratubhīśca, and with other sacrifices). The native dictionaries assign to ca the following significations or forces:—conjunction (anu-ācāya), collective combination (sam-āhāra), mutual connection (āre-tara), and aggregation (sam-uccāya). For the meaning of ca after an interrogative see 2. ka, 2. kathā, &c.; [cf. Gr. τε; Lat. que, pe (in nempe, &c.); Goth. uh; Zend ca; Old Pers. cā.]

चित्र cid, ind. [cf. 2. ca and id], an enclitic particle, requiring in the Veda a preceding simple verb to retain its accent. In the Pada-pāṭha cid is considered as an independent word (kaś cid &c. being always separated into two words). In later Sanskrit it is generally a particle affixed to interrogative pronouns to render them indefinite. The use of cid in Vedic Sanskrit is principally to lay stress or emphasis on a preceding word or to extend or limit the sense. Hence it is often translatable by 'even,' 'indeed,' 'also,' 'at least,' 'just,' 'merely,' &c. (e.g. devās cid, the gods indeed; ekasya cid, of one merely); or when preceded by a negative particle by 'not even' (e.g. na devās cid, not even the gods); but its force may often be expressed by merely laying an emphasis on the word by which it is preceded. Hence in Nirukta I. 4. it is said to be used pūjyām, i. e. for enhancing the force of a word. It is also stated by Yaska to be a particle of comparison (upamārthe). The following Vedic uses of cid may be noted; yac cid, yathā cid, = when indeed, as indeed; cid—cid or cid—ca or cid—u, = as well as—as; both—and.

Cid is often joined to interrogative pronouns and adverbs (see 2. ka, katama, katara, kad, kim, katham, kadā, kutas, kva, &c.) to render them indefinite; especially in classical Sanskrit, where the only other word after which it is found is jātu, q. v.

चेद् cēd (originally 2. cā + id), a compound particle, never found at the beginning of a sentence or verse. In the Veda it is sometimes used as a conjunction, like the simple cā, in the sense of 'and,' 'also,' 'even.' But in Vedic as well as classical Sanskrit the most usual sense of cēd is 'if,' 'although,' 'provided that,' 'when,' and in these senses it may be joined with the present indicative (e.g. mahyaṃ cēd dadātī tat, if he gives that to me); or with the future (e.g. trishṇāṃ cēt tyakshyati, if he shall abandon avarice); or with the conditional (e.g. vrishṭis cēt abhavishyat, if there should have been rain); or with the potential (e.g. gacchēs cēt, if he should go); or with the perfect (e.g. sa cēt māmāra, when he died); or with a participle (e.g. kartavyaṃ cēt priyam mahyam, if a kindness is to be done to me). It should be observed that in the Veda the verb which depends on cēd retains its accent.

The negative particle na may be prefixed to cēd either immediately or separated from it (e.g. na cēd vacāḥ karishyati or na karishyati cēd vacāḥ, if he should not make a speech); and frequently the negative no is used in connection with cēd, the verb being understood (e.g. dūram apasara no cēd dhantavyo 'st mayā, depart to a distance, if not, i.e. if thou departest not, thou art to be killed by me). Sometimes no cēd = api na, would that not! (e.g. no cēd evaṃ kuryāt, would that he did not so!). Rarely yadi and cēd are joined together, when cēd may be translated by 'that is,' 'that is to say,' 'namely' (e.g. yadi cēd rājyam avāpsyati, if, that is, he shall obtain the kingdom). In the argumentative writings of native commentators cēd preceded by iti and followed by na is often placed at the end of an objector's statement (e.g. 'Rig-vedam adhyemi' ityādi vākyaṃ pramāṇam iti cēn na, if it be urged that the text 'I peruse the Rig-veda' is a proof, no, it is not so). Ātha cēd, but if; [cf. neḍ.]

तद् tad, sa, sā, tad or tat, (the actual base of this pronoun in all the cases except the nom. sing. m. and f. is ta, but the neut. tad represents the base in compounds and in the derivative tādīya. In the Veda the nom. and acc. du. m. may be tā as well as tav, the nom. plur. n. tā as well as tāni, and the inst. plur. m. or n. tēbhis as well as tāis), he, she, it, that, this, (often occurring as a correlative of the relative pronoun ya, 'who, which,' the relative generally standing in the preceding clause, e. g. yasya buddhiḥ sa balavān, of whom there is intellect he is strong, see Gram. 799.)

Tad is sometimes used, for the sake of emphasis, in connection with the first and second personal pronouns, with other demonstratives and with relatives like the Lat. ille (e. g. so 'ham, I that very person, I myself; te vayam, we those very persons; tāv imau, those very two; tad etad, that very thing; yat tat kāraṇam, that very reason which; yā sā śrīḥ, that very fortune which).

Tad is repeated in the sense of 'this and that,' 'this or that,' 'various,' 'different' (e. g. tam taṁ deśam jagāma, he went to this and that place; tāsu tāsu yonishu, in different or various birth-places).

Tad is used in connection with a relative pronoun in the sense of 'whosoever,' 'whichever,' 'every' (e. g. yasmīns tasmīn kule, in any family whatever). Sometimes both the demonstrative and the relative are repeated (e. g. yadyat karma para-vaśam tat-tad varjayet, whatever action depends on another, that he should avoid).

Tad, n., may be used to signify 'this world' [cf. idam]; also to denote 'the supreme spirit or Brahman' (opposed to ivam).
